The main menu of 7 Little Words has four daily puzzles that are free along with forty-five puzzle zones. Each zone contains a collection of fifty puzzles with the first free zone. After the first zone, each additional zone will cost you $0.99 through in-app purchase. The settings are accessible through the main menu or game screens. The game settings cover the activation/deactivation of the game's sound, revealing the number of letters in the word with the clue, playing the English version of the daily puzzles and your live tile background task. The game is simple. At the top of the screen, you have seven clues, and at the bottom of the screen are your twenty groups of letters. Tap the letter groups to build one of the words and when you think you have everything right, tap the guess button. If your guess is right, the clue will be marked off the list. To help you with each puzzle, there is a shuffle and hint buttons at the bottom of the game screen. The shuffle button rearranges the tiles to give you a new perspective on word identification. The hint button will reveal the first letter, the first tile, or the whole word. You're limited to fifteen tips, and if you run out, you can always buy more through in-app purchases. Thankfully, there are plenty of plus-size mouse options on the market. A member of our web team came across what could be a useful and cost-effective business tool. iDictate is a service that will transcribe documents sent to them by phone or dictation device - think traditional dictation; it's called to dictate the document -- for about 1 cent per word. They also offer standard transcription services for about 2 cents per word. Most transcription services bill by the hour, so that looks like a good deal -- especially with delivery times ranging from 24 minutes to 24 hours. Did FC Now readers use the service? Not so long ago, Comstock, 46, was in marketing at General Electric; we must thank you for your eomagination. She moved to GE's NBC Universal unit 18 months ago, and just got a new gig that combines ad sales and digital media through the television network, cable channels, and film studio. Do you want to broadcast heroes, read the interactive novel, then make an online offer for the works of art of the show? Thank you Comstock for all this too. The economics of television were simple. Do you understand how to make money today, when I can watch 30 Rock pretty much anytime? We understand that much better than before. Digital media allows us to open new windows without the cannibalization you might expect. So yes, we can offer 30 Rock in preview, then on air, then streaming, then iTunes, then mobile, and then syndicated. We did modeling. Looks like we're going to make more money. How do advertisers deal with this new world? Some know what they want, some less so. But now, every marketer is going digital, not because it's trendy, but because they have to. Purchase groups have created units called sight, sound, and motion [to work through the media]. They expect us to reset on targeted consumers: what do we know about them and how do we achieve them? How are viewing habits changing? We had 60 million streams [of TV shows] in NBC.com. Many of these are regular viewers. Others are changing the weather. They are also position-shifting, with iTunes or on phones. And it works for you? You have to do it. If consumers are in control, they will understand how they want to look. We need to find the right solution. What's next? More personal expression [from viewers], the desire to be involved in storytelling. Like, SMS-text to vote on a reality show, or watch Heroes and dial a phone number. That stuff is so rudimentary; we'll look back one day and say, so cute then! All this implies a huge cultural change. How is NBC Universal coping? This space is hectic and chaotic, and we are constantly trying to get out of our way. With success, you get a little safer. But we still need to be more focused and more disciplined. You are still, as you once said of frickin'impatient? Yes. And I'm scared. I'm constantly scanning the landscape. What's next? Who gets there first? This business is hypersensitive like this. You have to choose a path, keep us and feel good. The second intuiant will end up with more ulcers. It is common to use the verb to say over and over again when writing the dialogue. Not only did he say repetitive, but he's also not very descriptive. To better describe the feelings behind the reported discourse and other statements in narrative writing, it is important to use vocal verbs and adverbs. Voice verbs and adverbs help provide motivation behind statements, questions, and answers, and convey important information to readers. Each vowel verb and vocal adverb has a brief description of typical usage, as well as an example statement illustrating how to replace said it said with something much more descriptive. Voice verbs provide information about the tone of the statement. For example, the vocal verb lament indicates that something is said so complaining in a low voice. These vocal verbs are grouped by a general indication of the type of declaration made. Examples: Alison snapped the answer. Jack gasped in reaction to the scene. I gave a quick answer to your question. adviseargueuionnoteobservewarn Examples: Pete warned children to be careful. The teacher remarked that exercise was difficult. The driver alerted his passengers to the noise. esclaimebellowcallcryscreeamshoutyell Examples: He shouted the answer. The boys screamed as they plunged into the cold water. The mother cried out in contempt when her son was charged with the crime. The following four vocal verbs are often used to describe someone who complained: Examples: Jack mumbled his answers to questions. He murmured so badly that they couldn't figure it out. I complained that I was hurt. Examples: The teacher announced the exam at the end of the week. Jane asserted her rights as a voter. Police have ordered protesters to leave the area. Voice verbs provide information about how the declaration is made. Vocal adverbs are often used to provide more information about the speaker's feeling when he makes a statement. For example, the vowel adverb joyfully indicates that something is said with great joy. For example, He joyfully exclaimed the news! indicates that the speaker is happy when making the declaration. Compare this to He arrogantly exclaimed the news, which conveys very different information about the speaker. admirable: she shows respect for someoneExamply: Alice admiringly noticed her clothes.angrily: she indicates angerExamply: She angrily denounces her crimes.coincidentally: without much importanceExamply: She casually admitted her mistake.cautiously: carefullyExamply Example: She cautiously extra homework, cheerfully: it indicates joy, happinessExamply: Frank cheerfully agreed to do the job.
